PROSPEROUS SAN ANTONIO.
One of Her Leading Citizens Speaks Enthusiastically of It.
Nature has made the Rio Grande valley one of the most favored in several ways of all her many locations fitted for the habitation of her crowning work of creation—man. Among these are a rich soil—highly productive when properly watered—stern, rugged mountains towering in their majestic grandeur into the beautiful, clear sky; and a climate equal to anything and superior to most that is given to those that are called the "famous places" upon this earth of ours.

Among the dozens of localities in the valley that are especially adapted and inviting as town sites, none are more so than San Antonio, some eighty-eight miles south of us on the Santa Fe Railway. Sheltered on every side for miles and miles by the various mountain ranges, the broad valley at this point, with its deep alluvial soil, well dotted with green groves and cultivated fields, it is a section that at once attracts the attention of the traveler as he passes, or the visitor who stops to look more closely into its inducements.

A. H. Hilton, the senior member of the mercantile firm of A. H. Hilton & Co., accompanied by another leading citizen, Hon. Rufino Montoya, of that town, spent yesterday in the city. In a brief interview with Mr. Hilton, a CITIZEN representative gleaned some information about the place that would seem of interest to our readers. The talk was about as follows:

"Never has there been a more prosperous year to the people generally down here than in my whole seventeen years' experience than that of 1907. It is no exaggeration to say that everybody has felt the quickening effect of the higher prices for wool, sheep, cattle, etc. Nobody questions the influence the republican policy as expressed in the Dingley law has exerted on prices. As far as ready money is concerned there are families down there who, if such were needed, could command enough to open a bank of their own."

"Yes, providence would seem to have been especially in the work of assisting in making times better. Take our wheat production, for example. It has been unprecedented, and of a high grade. I know one man who gathered sixty bushels an acre from a patch of six acres. Others ran all the way from forty to fifty bushels. It was a great year."

"It is true as you suggest. Nature has given us the soil, the water and our super climate. But man has an important part to play to get the most out of these. When the Carthage mines closed we missed the monthly pay roll very much; but our people turned and looked, and behold, greater riches were under our feet. Our average in wheat, alfalfa and other crops is steadily increasing."

Two years ago thirty men were cultivating 432 acres. Now forty-eight men are engaged in the work, and enough new land is being broken to make the total on that ditch 576 acres. This year the ditch will be enlarged to meet the greater demand for water."

"Yes, more land is also being brought under cultivation every year; I think as much as on that of the old San Antonio. Now that we have found the way, our people are determined to make that part of the valley a great farming section."

"Can it be done? I think so. Let me make another scheme now under discussion. Its practicability I think you will readily concede. That is the growing of canebrake. You know the plant and are familiar with its high tannic acid properties. Like the sugar beet there is an ever present market for tannic acid. It is in demand. A growing crop of the canebrake plant requires to be irrigated during the months of November to April, inclusive, when none is needed for other crops. There is always water in the river during these months. Thus you see both the feasibility and practicality of the proposition. We have plenty of land and there is no question about the water. This matter is now assuming tangible form."

"No, we have not given up the sugar beet project. I admit that it is somewhat in the distance, but I feel it needs no prophetic vision to see it there. Everybody who has looked into the subject knows we live within the charmed zone that produces the best in a high degree of perfection. We have the land in plenty, the soil well adapted to its cultivation, and, of course, the ever delightful climate. In due time our people will have a well devised storage system of cane constructed to enable them to catch the flood waters and thus give a guarantee of the sure production of the beet, to assure the factory. It is bound to come."

LATEST MINING NEWS.

Information Regarding Mining and Milling Operations in the Cerrillos.

THE GOLDEN COCHITL

From Bland Herald.

Robert Bouthitt, the able superintendent of the Washington mine, paid off the force of this big and valuable property this morning.

The assessment work on the Independence, a Colia canyon property with a strong five foot lead of fine quartz, was finished yesterday.

George C. Smith continues working the three valuable Colia canyon properties, which are the Daily Varden, Point Breeze and Harrison, in which he is interested, with much improvement to their showing.

Work will soon be resumed on the Delphos in Colia canyon. This property belongs to Patrick Hartney, E. H. Shaw and Charles Warlan, is near the Albemarle mine and possesses four foot vein of quartz that assays $7.50 gold to the ton at the surface.

Recent locations of mining claims are the Partners by W. D. McCoy and P. A. Gardin, the U. S. by Martin Hart, the Monroe by Edward Kelley, all of which are situated in Colia canyon on the mineral belt on which are the Albemarle and Victor groups, the Midnight by F. J. Walker, Pina canyon.

After a short suspension, Thomas H. Benson has resumed work on the Puzzle mine in Colia canyon. New work is being performed across the canyon and in the main tunnel and is showing the property up well. A great future is in store for the Puzzle, which is separated but a short distance from the big and famous Albemarle group of mines.

John Murphy, who is interested in a number of valuable Peralta canyon properties, was in Bland during the week and reported work in Peralta canyon to be lively and the mines improving. He returned in company with J. W. O'Brien, of Telluride, who is a mining man of much experience and in the Cerrillos district investigating the properties. It is probable that good results will come of the increased interest being taken in the big leads of Peralta canyon.
